Re-engage students early

Teaching

TEACHING ONE-PAGE PRACTICAL GUIDE

WHAT IS THIS FOR?

Use supportive outreach and clear re-entry points before disengagement becomes failure.

WHY DOES IT MATTER?

Use supportive outreach and clear re-entry points before disengagement becomes failure.

WHAT DOES THIS LOOK LIKE?

Changes in attendance or participation are noticed early and followed up supportively before students become disconnected.

WHAT CAN I DO?

- Notice patterns of absence or non-engagement early.
- Reach out with a short, non-judgemental message.
- Tell the student exactly what they need to do next to re-enter.
- Repeat help pathways at pressure points rather than only in week 1.

EXAMPLE IN PRACTICE

A tutor sends a short message after repeated absence: what was missed, the minimum next step, and where the student can get help.

STARTING POINT TO ADAPT

For the next teaching period, our team will: notice patterns of absence or non-engagement early; reach out with a short, non-judgemental message. We will review student feedback and adjust if needed.

GO FURTHER AT UQ

UQ teaching practices

Students as Partners

Inclusive practice