Transparent marking and grade review

Are marking and grade-query processes clear?

EQUITY / ASSESSMENT

ONE-PAGE TEACHING GUIDE

WHAT IS IT?

Marking and grade-query processes are communicated proactively, not left for students to discover

WHY DOES IT MATTER?

The same course requirement can land very differently depending on time, money, care, disability, work, housing or confidence. Equity asks whether students with different lives have a real opportunity to participate and succeed, rather than simply receiving the same rule.

THE STUDENT EXPERIENCE

- “This course assumes university is the only thing happening in my life.”
- “I can technically enrol, but the way this is organised makes participation fragile.”

HOW CAN I DO IT?

- Explain how marking works, what moderation means and how students can query results.
- Make the process easy to find at the time of return.
- Reduce mystery around grading so students do not need insider knowledge to seek clarification.

EXAMPLE IN PRACTICE

When marks are released, the course site includes a short explanation of the marking process and a clear grade review pathway.

STARTING POINT TO ADAPT

For this assessment, we aim to make marking, moderation and grade-query processes visible before students need to use them. The learning outcomes being assessed are [insert outcomes].
