Providing learning materials early

Are key materials available early?

EQUITY / TEACHING

ONE-PAGE TEACHING GUIDE

WHAT IS IT?

Course materials are released early, giving students who need extra time the chance to engage before class

WHY DOES IT MATTER?

The same course requirement can land very differently depending on time, money, care, disability, work, housing or confidence. Equity asks whether students with different lives have a real opportunity to participate and succeed, rather than simply receiving the same rule.

THE STUDENT EXPERIENCE

- “This course assumes university is the only thing happening in my life.”
- “I can technically enrol, but the way this is organised makes participation fragile.”

HOW CAN I DO IT?

- Share key slides, readings or guiding questions in advance where possible.
- Prioritise early release of materials that require heavier reading or planning.
- Use early release to help students organise work, care and access arrangements.

EXAMPLE IN PRACTICE

A lecturer posts weekly materials several days in advance so students can read around shifts, caring or access needs.

STARTING POINT TO ADAPT

In this course, we aim to release key information and learning materials early enough for students to plan around work, care and access needs.

GO FURTHER AT UQ

Explore Course Teaching Feedback at UQ

Course Teaching Feedback

Students as Partners